

EUROPE AND AMERICA: CAN WE STILL WORK TOGETHER, OR ARE WE MOVING APART?

AS PART OF THE ACG 2014 DR. HENRY A. KISSINGER TRANSATLANTIC SPEAKER SERIES

Dr. Constanze Stelzenmüller, Senior Transatlantic Fellow, and Director, Transatlantic Trends, German Marshall Fund

America is pivoting to Asia, Europe is preoccupied with events in Ukraine. Can we still work together on crucial issues of mutual concern like Middle East peace, Iran, and the rise of an assertive China—or is the era of transatlantic cooperation over? What are the domestic factors which affect our will and ability to work together?

RECEPTION TO FOLLOW

Dr. Constanze Stelzenmüller is a Senior Transatlantic Fellow with the German Marshall Fund in Berlin, and the director of GMF's survey program, Transatlantic Trends. Previously, she was Director of GMF's Berlin office (2005-2009), and a reporter and international security editor with the weekly DIE ZEIT in Hamburg (1994-2005). She is an international lawyer by training, and studied in Bonn, Geneva, and Harvard. She speaks and publishes regularly on issues of German, European and transatlantic strategy, as well as on foreign and security policy. She chairs the academic advisory council of the German Foundation on Peace Research, and was the chairwoman of Women in International Security Germany from 2009-2013.

Sponsored by the American Council on Germany and
George Mason University's Office of Global & International Strategies

The Dr. Henry A. Kissinger Transatlantic Speaker Series was made possible by a generous grant from the Robert Bosch Foundation. This speaker series will bring fifteen high level German speakers to the United States in 2014 to speak at the ACG Eric M. Warburg Chapters across the country on important issues pertaining to the German-American and transatlantic partnerships
